

Dr. Mylavarapu Venkatramesh
Vice President, Research and Development Biological Crop Nutrition

Mylavarapu Venkatramesh joined Agrinos in 2014 and currently serves the company as Vice President, Research and Development Biological Crop Nutrition.

Dr. Venkatramesh brings more than 30 years of experience in plant pathology, soil microbiology, plant biochemistry and metabolic engineering to his position with the Global Research and Development Leadership Team at Agrinos. In addition, he has over 17 years of experience in leading biotechnology discovery research programs.

Prior to joining Agrinos, Dr. Venkatramesh served as the New Technology Leader for the Seeds and Biotechnology Platform at Dow AgroSciences. He has also held positions in project management and research & development at Exelixis Plant Sciences, Monsanto and Renessen.

Dr. Venkatramesh received his Bachelors of Science from Bangalore University followed by a Masters of Science in Botany from Madras University and a Doctor of Philosophy in Botany from S.V. University. Dr. Venkatramesh came to the U.S. for postdoctoral research in plant biochemistry and biotechnology, which included a 2-year visiting scientist position in Germany through an Alexander Von Humboldt Foundation fellowship.